

SSID Client Isolation is a concept and technology where wireless users are logically "walled off" from one another, each one forming what appears to the client to be an independent network between itself and the access point.

This technique helps keep WLAN clients safe from would-be snoopers on the same WLAN.

Back